Endogenous electron paramagnetic resonance (EPR) and ENDOR measurements were used to study the K1-Fe(II) site of a photosystem II (PS II) complex from halophilic Archaeoglobus fulgidus. It is shown that the photochemistry of this PS II complex is similar to the known characteristic features of most high-light-induced complexes, with the following exceptions: 1) the rapid decay of S(2) Q(A)(-)(), a reaction inhibited in these complexes by the presence of the two electron donors, diuron and dichloromethyl-p-benzoquinone, 2) significant differences between energy transfers from the primary donor to the secondary acceptors, which are at least in part due to differences in the redox state of the donor in the complexes, 3) the existence of an independent donor-independent state in PS II, which can be induced by NaCl addition and is associated with a S(2) Q(A)(-)(), S(2) Q(A)(-)(), S(2) Q(A)(-)(), S(3) Q(A)(-)(), and S(3) Q(A)(-)() electron configuration, 4) the observation of a likely configuration for the S(2) Q(A)(-)() in the PS II complex, and 5) the presence of a stable O(2)(-) radical in the 3 K region.Q: How to run Windows Store app on Windows Embedded 8.1 IoT Core I have been given a task to install a Windows Store app on
